What have Electric Co-ops done that commercial Power Companies couldn't do?

They created jobs by the thousands during the depression and they continue to do so. In the first twenty five years of rural elec-trification, rural people spent more than fif-teen billion dollars for electrical appliances. They will buy more than a billion dollars worth this year.

This is possible because Electric Co-ops are not in business to make a profit. Their motive is to provide people with adequate electric service at the lowest possible cost. Rural Electrics are good for Alabama and all

Have you met the WALLACE'S?

Judge Wallace, you probably already know or have heard about. He's the man who's been responsible for bringing our state many good things during the last fifteen years. As a member of the Alabama Legislature, he sponsored the Wallace Industrial Act, which has brought over one-hundred new industries to Alabama and provided millions of dollars in payrolls for our people.

He also sponsored the Wallace Trade School Act, which resulted in the building of five fine trade schools for Alabama.

While serving as a Circuit Judge in 1959, he risked up to five years in Federal Prison by refusing to turn over voter records to the Civil Rights Commission. And he won this courageous fight to protect your rights against outside meddling by the Federal Government.

George Wallace is busier than ever these days campaigning for governor of Alabama. The rest of the family is helping, too-his wife, Lurleen, and the children-Bobbie Joe who's seventeen, Peggy Sue, twelve, and George, Jr., ten. Janie Lee, the baby, is a little young, yet, but she knows there's lots of excitement going on.

George and Lurleen Wallace are proud of their children, and they want the same things for them that you want for your children. They want the public schools they attend to be top-notch. They want the state they live in, and will build their future in, to be prosperous.

George Wallace wants to be Governor because he wants to finish the job he's been doing to make Alabama a better place to live. He
